About object types

An object type is a group of similar objects in an object schema. These objects share attributes, references, and other characteristics that make them useful to hold information.

Here’s an object type called 'Computers' with seventeen individual objects. In the graph at left you can see the other object types that it references, and in the list at right you can see the attributes of this object type.

Object types are arranged in a hierarchy to create an object schema.